"Agreeable" Passengers. There is still considerable discussion among seafaring men about the abandonment of the Jeddah by the captain and officers. It is stated that the borde of Moslem pilgrims had become unmanageable, and that the lives of the captain and officers were endangered. The captain will appeal against the suspension of his certificate. It is understood that the British government will institute an inquiry into the charges of overcrowding and other abuses practised on the vessels carrying pilgrims, with a view to the adoption of a stringent system of supervision.

The late Captain Carter, who has had large experience of pilgrim traffic, thus graphically recited his experiences: "My 'batch' consisted of Turcomans. Arabo Persians and Bedouins. They all came on board armed to the teeth, but, of course, I had all their weapons taken charge of by my officers and locked up in safety. I mean all the weapons we saw. They took up their quarters in any part of the ship, and from the moment of embarkation set the captain and officers at defiance. One day I had occasion to give orders for the removal of some luggage, which I found placed on the steering gear, and which, of course, interfered with the navigation of my vessel, I was informed by my officers that the owners of this luggage refused to shift it, and on my insisting on obedience to my orders. found about me 150 cutthroat Arabs, all armed and prepared to resist my authority. Discretion was the better part of valor, for my three officers and myself were the only Englishmen on board, so the olds were too great, and I quietly gave way. I thus found I had not got possession of all the swords, daggers and firearma, which grieved me much. We were often alarmed by cries of "Fire!" but on only one (ccasion was it at all serious. In this instance some of these men had lighted a fire on the bare deck, in order to prepare some tea. Of course a dry pine deck, with its oakum and pitch, was soon ablaz. Luckily it was the upper deck, so the fire was soon mastered. Had it happened below the result would have been terrible, for the 'tween decks would have been filled with smoke, the confusion and panic would have rendered the numbs nawo the five boats would have been taken possession of and swamped, and a dense cloud of smoke would have been the quickly vanishing sign of s dreadful disaster. The ship and her living freight would have been among 'the missing. A shocking scene courred one very dark night which convinces me of the utterly savage nature of the mee I had to deal with. It was reported to me at ten p. m. that one of the pilgrims was dead. So I gave orders that the friends of the deceased should take the b de to the lee side and prepare it for burial. You was being done, but to carrying the corpac scross he deck the bearers happened to disturb some Persians who were asleep. Instantly there was a terrible uproar. Swords, daggers and bludg eons were brandished; the corner was nearly toro to pieces, and one of my officers, who attempted to quell the disturbance, was thrown down. An implement, something bytween a tomahawk and a pick axe, was aimed at his head, but a friendly hand was year, and his life was saved. I have carefully preserved this formidable weapon as a memento of such happy times."-N. Y. Herald
